Dear Dr. Sapora:

I am pleased to submit to you the first Annual Report of the Office of Recreation and Park Resources. It is hoped that this report will give you some indication as to the activities of this office during the past year.

As I am sure you are aware, when a new unit of this nature is established, it is essential that the staff give it their full cooperation and support. I am pleased to report to you that the Office of Recreation and Park Resources staff performed in an enthusiastic and dedicated manner. The success of our first year's operation is evidence of this support.

I would like also to thank you, Dr. M. S. Williams, and Dr. J. B. Claar, for your continued support and encouragement. It is this support that make the ORPR staff look forward to a bigger and better year in 1969-70.

Sincerely

INTRODUCTION

The following report will cover the periods of September 1, 1968, through and including June 30, 1969. The past year has been devoted primarily to developing an organizational structure through which the new Office of Recreation and Park Resources operates.

In September, 1969, approval was given for the merger of the Field Service of the Department of Recreation and Park Administration in the College of Physical Education with the Rural Recreation Section of the Cooperative Extension Service in the College of Agriculture. The newly merged unit is called the Office of Recreation and Park Resources. The primary purpose of the office is to assist county Extension advisers in conducting educational programs in their respective counties; to provide consultant services to governmental and private agencies that involve unique problems in parks and recreation; to strengthen the University's teaching efforts; and to provide a laboratory for carrying out a sound recreation and park research program.

The Office of Recreation and Park Resources operates through three divisions: outdoor recreation resources development, program and leadership resource development, and community recreation resource development.

The Outdoor Recreation Resources Development Section, through consultation and research projects, deals primarily in the planning, organization, and administration of county and regional park systems such as Conservation Districts, Forest Preserve Districts, River Conservancy Districts. This section also secures, prepares, and disseminates educational materials as it relates to Outdoor Recreation Resources. It also concerns itself with cooperation among the various state and federal agencies involved in Outdoor Recreation. These agencies include the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation in the Department of the Interior, U. S. Department of Agriculture and state agencies such as the Departments of State Conservation and the Department of Business and Economic Development.

The Program and Leadership Resources Development Section concerns itself with providing information and educational materials to professional and lay personnel in recreation and parks. It also is responsible for the examination of program techniques and the solutions to problems that relate to the conduct of recreation and park programs. Personnel of this section collect, prepare and disseminate information and materials relating to new leadership development, thus enabling recreation and parks groups to provide a more effective service.

The Community Recreation Resources Development Section is responsible for consultation and research dealing with recreation and park problems affecting urban and suburban communities. It attempts to develop an evaluative criteria needed in the planning and organizing of Park Districts and municipal Departments of Recreation and/or Parks. Personnel of this section assist recreation and park authorities in increasing services to their communities.

The new Office of Recreation and Park Resources facilitates many cooperative relationships both within the University and with other institutions. For example, a major source of assistance to the Office is the contact with the county Extension advisers. At present there are over 350 advisers assigned throughout the state. Their knowledge of local conditions and their influence in the community is valuable to the ORPR staff. Efforts are also made to further strengthen the relationship between ORPR and the Illinois Association of Park Districts and the Illinois Park and Recreation Society. Other cooperative relationships include the Department of Business and Economic Development, Department of Conservation, Illinois Youth Commission, State Recreation Council. Of course, as the Office of Recreation and Park Resources expands its service other important relationships will be developed.

It is necessary that a number of relationships be developed with disciplines within the University. For example, presently underway is the Cooperative effort between ORPR and the Center of Urban Study.

Each of these units worked together with the Model Cities program in the City of Chicago. The expertise that is available in each unit was coordinated thus resulting in better service to the citizens involved in the Model City Program. Obviously, all problems cannot be isolated within the framework of Recreation and Parks. Long range planning, for example, requires the assistance and advice from the University of Illinois' Bureau of Community planning; assessing the recreation needs of a community requires the assistance of a sociologist and psychologist; the assistance from the Forestry Department will be of great value in park management; personnel from the Department of Agricultural Economics can assist in serving as resource persons in solving problems relating to land use and to private and commercial recreation enterprise.

The new Office of Recreation and Park Resources is a concerted effort on the part of the University of Illinois to provide the best possible Recreation and Park service to the citizens of Illinois. This new unit puts Illinois in the forefront in providing public service in Parks and Recreation.

In a recent report submitted by the Office of the Vice President to the President of the University of Illinois and the following quote was made regarding the University role in providing public service: "the University should renew and extend its commitment to public service as a major responsibility so vital and so organically linked to teaching and research that its absence is unthinkable and the question of priority is irrelevant." This statement reflects the University's commitment for its future role. The staff of the Office of Recreation and Park Resources will continue to make every effort to see that his commitment is realized.
